For Every Child . . . A Place to Call Home

The Foster & Adoptive Care Coalition (Coalition) exists to ensure every child has a place to call home. To achieve that goal, we focus on two things: finding homes for our community's hardest-to-place kids (older youth, sibling groups, and kids with special needs), and supporting foster and adoptive families so our kids can heal.

Founded in 1989 in response to the crack cocaine epidemic, the Coalition has since emerged as a national leader in foster care reform, especially for our innovative response to the opioid epidemic. The crisis is real and immediate; we see more children in care today than we have in decades. But while children entering foster care during the crack cocaine epidemic often spent their entire childhoods in the system, our programs today find families for children in record time.

The Coalition offers the way forward for an overwhelmed child welfare system. We find new ways to build resilience in our families and create stability in our children's chaotic lives. We model transparency and accountability, setting the standard for data-driven solutions to complex problems. We inspire other agencies to reach higher in service to children in foster care; our innovative programs are currently being replicated at more than 20 other agencies around the country as they seek to reproduce our unmatched outcomes.

This groundbreaking work is only possible with the resources to innovate. Although we cannot predict what the next crisis will be, we can be ready. By joining the Now & Forever Society, you commit your legacy to every child's dream of a loving family, now and forever.

We invite you to join the Now & Forever Society, an esteemed group of forward-thinking individuals who recognize that there will always be children who need a place to call home. Your legacy becomes a living testament, a promise that every child will grow up with a family.

Dae'yona's Story

Adopted in 2018

Late one winter night in 2008, 7-year-old Dae'yona and 8-year-old Darian came into foster care because their mom was addicted to heroin and struggled with mental illness. They were immediately split up and placed with strangers.

Their caseworker was brand new. She tried to contact relatives but found fewer than 10. With no known father, she felt she'd reached a dead end.

Out of options, the caseworker turned to Extreme Recruitment®, a daring new program to find forever families for the toughest-to-place children in foster care. She reached out to the Foster & Adoptive Care Coalition and met Edna, who was pioneering the groundbreaking Extreme Recruitment® model.

In short order, Edna doubled the number of potential relatives to take in the siblings. Then she doubled it again! Soon, she had created a burgeoning family tree and found a cousin who would consider adoption. Things were looking up for the children and Dae'yona and Darian began to see a way out of foster care.

Soon after, the children's mother died of an overdose. Even though their life with her was far from perfect, the news devastated the children. Adoption became more important than ever.

Edna had identified a long list of relatives willing to be involved in the children's lives. But a few weeks later at Dae'yona's next court appearance, tragedy struck. Each of the children's foster parents refused visits with the prospective adoptive relatives. They convinced the judge that the kids were better off aging out of foster care rather than finding a forever home.

The die was cast, and Edna was not allowed to present evidence that healthy, alternative options were possible. Not only was Edna off the case, she was not even allowed to say goodbye to the children.

After 10 years with no news, Edna received a call from a colleague with the terrible news that Darian was in prison. Edna's stomach turned. She asked about Dae'yona.

As is the case with too many children relegated to foster care, Dae'yona and her brother were eventually kicked out of their foster homes and began the heartbreaking shuffle from foster home to foster home, from school to school.

Dae'Yona had grown desperate. She was 17 years old and still trying to find someone to adopt her.

Edna was quickly reinvented onto the case. She met Dae'Yona at a restaurant, seeing Dae'Yona sitting at a table by herself. Edna told Dae'Yona how troubled she remained about not being able to say goodbye years before. She told Dae'Yona that she never stopped thinking about her and her brother. The situation was dire. More than half of Dae'Yona's life had been spent in foster care. Nearing 18 years old and struggling in school, Dae'Yona was considered "unadoptable" by many agencies.

It took Edna two weeks to find an aunt, Stephanie, who was willing to consider adopting Dae'Yona. Under the caring guidance of her aunt and the behind-the-scenes workings of the Coalition's Educational Advocacy team, Dae'Yona attended summer school. She became a straight-A student and a cheerleader. Her coworkers at her part-time job loved her.

The Coalition helped the new family adjust and thrive. We facilitated difficult conversations about living with past trauma, setting boundaries and expectations. We brought cutting-edge, trauma-informed parenting techniques into their home, and helped them apply these techniques in real-life situations.

Though Dae'Yona regained her life and future, she ached for her brother, whom she hadn't seen since his arrest years prior. Darian represented something essential: the last person alive to know Dae'Yona since birth. After all, sibling relationships are the longest-lasting a child will ever have.

Due to the sensitivity of the situation, a reunion took Edna weeks of delicate negotiations. Finally the day arrived and Aunt Stephanie took Dae'Yona to the prison. Dae'Yona worried that if only she had helped Darian believe they would one day find a forever family, that maybe he wouldn't be in prison. She wished she could have helped him keep his hope, helped him hang on a little longer.

Today, Dae'Yona talks about her adoption day the way most people recall their wedding, or the birth of a child. She always knew she was worthy of a family. She never gave up hope.

In 2011, before this work was supported in our community, Edna was removed from seven cases by foster parents, judges, and caseworkers who didn't see the value in what she did. Since then, Edna has created 46 adoptions for our community's most vulnerable children, including sibling groups, older youth, and kids with special needs. In 2016, Edna was named "Outstanding Adoption Specialist of the Year" by the nationally-renowned Dave Thomas Foundation for Adoption. She has not been removed from a case in years.

“ From the first time we volunteered at an event, it was immediately clear that Coalition employees are not only strong advocates for kids, but they are all genuinely optimistic and passionate about what they do. We decided to join the Now & Forever Society by leaving a gift to the Coalition that is a percentage of our total trust so we can provide for both the people we love and this important mission even after we're gone. ”
